

Your Philosophy & Ethics Journey

Further, Higher Education & Careers

Philosophy complements all other Humanities subjects. In particular, its focus on understanding the world we live in pairs it particularly well with subjects like Sociology, Politics and Psychology. In addition, the skills of persuasion and analysis across an extended argument mean Philosophy complements English and History. Surprisingly, it is a popular choice among students wishing for careers in medicine, as it provides a highly-valued ethical and social focus. Students will also develop independent learning skills that are useful for those completing the Extended Project qualification, vocational A Levels or BTECs.

Philosophy is an ideal choice for any career that involves analysing and arguing about social issues – common examples include: law, journalism, politics and policy-making, medicine, diplomacy, public relations, marketing, teaching, publishing and charity work, such as fundraising and advocacy.
